The Honorable Anna Eshoo
241 Cannon House Office Building
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Congresswoman Eshoo:

As elected officials, we are committed to serving the residents of our cities by ensuring the digital infrastructure of tomorrow is safe, reliable, and is accessible for everyone. Cities and counties are not only leaders in innovation, but also have an obligation to the public to ensure safe, equitable deployment, and fiscally prudent broadband investment to their communities. It is essential that communities maintain control of the small cell application and review process to ensure safe deployment of this technology and that everyone benefits. The Federal Communications Commission preempted this process in a rushed and overreaching manner. For these reasons, we applaud your effort in restoring authority to the rightful position of local jurisdictions and support the Accelerating Wireless Broadband Development by Empowering Local Communities Act (H.R. 530).

H.R. 530 would return local governments' ability to balance competing interests for the use of the public rights-of-way by overturning actions of the Federal Communications Commission in August and September of 2018. While we support the Commission's goal of ensuring affordable broadband access for every American, the Commission's actions do nothing to achieve that goal. It puts the interests of national corporations over the needs of our communities by making it impossible for local governments to manage the public rights-of-way effectively and equitably. It cedes control of local property to national corporations without fair compensation in return, and without taking into account considerations for closing the digital divide, public safety, public utility services such as water, sewer, and electricity, the travelling public, environmental concerns, economic development, and maintenance costs.

Your leadership in passing H.R. 530 is critical to ensuring local governments have the necessary tools to manage local public assets in a manner that balances competing interests while encouraging responsible deployment of wireless broadband facilities. Without this action, communities will face financial strain and potentially delayed progress in adopting to the FCC's overreaching actions. It is necessary for both industry and our residents to reverse the FCC's rules on small cells and restore local control.

The Honorable Anna Eshoo
United States House of Representatives
202 Cannon House Office Building
Washington, DC 20515

March 1, 2019

Dear Representative Eshoo:

We the undersigned strongly support H.R. 530, the Accelerating Wireless Broadband Development by Empowering Local Communities Act of 2019, to overturn actions by the Federal Communications Commission (FCC or Commission) that are in violation of the Communications Act of 1934. The FCC's assertion of authority over public power pole attachments is in plain contravention of section 224 of the Communications Act that explicitly prevents the Commission from regulating attachments to public power electric utility poles.

On September 26, 2018, the Commission adopted its Declaratory Ruling and Third Report and Order (Report and Order). In it, the FCC asserts that it can preempt state and local laws or requirements governing access to public right-of-way (ROW) and publicly-owned infrastructure within the ROW, including rates, terms, or conditions of pole attachment agreements, using sections 253 and 332 of the Communications Act. Section 253 seeks to promote competition for telecommunications services by barring state and local barriers to entry. Section 332 gives the FCC exclusive jurisdiction over mobile communications services and provides telecommunications companies with nondiscriminatory access to state and local ROW. Neither section 253 nor section 332 has anything to do with pole attachments, which are exclusively governed by section 224.

In adopting the Report and Order, the FCC claims its actions will "remove regulatory barriers that would unlawfully inhibit the deployment of infrastructure necessary to support...new [broadband] services." Yet the Commission provided no empirical evidence of public power utilities being a barrier to broadband deployment because of pole attachment rates or regulations. Instead, it arbitrarily imposes federal, one-size-fits-all pole attachment regulations on public power utility poles. This regulatory overreach by the Commission to regulate public power utilities using sections 253 and 332 of the Communication Act limits the ability of public power utilities to responsibly and equitably manage their electric utility poles, and it is contrary to the clear exemption in section 224 and the express intent of Congress.

The Commission's actions also ignore legitimate concerns related to the placement of communications infrastructure on public power utility poles. For example, accommodating wireless attachments above the electric line may create lineworker safety issues and may run afoul of lineworker safety standards such as the National Electric Safety Code (NESC), which is mandatory in some states. In addition, small cells and accompanying infrastructure may be too heavy or large for existing public power utility poles, and if existing poles cannot support this additional infrastructure, poles may break, fall, or otherwise cause electric reliability concerns. Finally, wireless attachments may cause radio frequency interference to utility systems, which also may affect electric reliability.

Public power utilities provide reliable and affordable electricity to over 49 million Americans. We strongly support repealing the Commission's Report and Order, which we believe exceeds the FCC's authority under the Communications Act to the detriment of public power utility customers. We greatly appreciate you introducing this legislation to overturn the Commission's unlawful actions to regulate public power pole attachments. We look forward to working with you to advance this important legislation.
